

WILSON-HUGGINS HOUSE
Still Pond, Maryland

K-447

Most of the buildings in the town of Still Pond date from the late 19th century and as a group provide a fairly representative sample of plan types, materials, and decorative detail available to builders of that period. This structure, with its side-hall plan and scroll-work brackets, exemplifies the most common type of house erected for families of moderate income in the small Kent County towns.

On spite of its simplicity, the house is nicely proportioned and very carefully detailed. In recent years, it was remodeled into two apartments. The remodeling includes a modern interior and an attractive side entry porch to provide access to the second story. Although original detail has been removed from the interior, the building's chief importance lies in its being a part of the Still Pond streetscape and that remains unchanged. It exemplifies the successful reuse of an historic building without a loss of its character.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Wilson-Huggins House is located directly behind the old Medders Store. It sits on city lot that includes a frame barn now converted into an apartment. The building faces southwest.

The house is three bays wide and two stories tall. It has a side hall plan with the entry in the east bay. Across the front of the building is a one-story, hipped-roofed porch with a raised seam roof, and at the rear is a four bay long by two bay wide ell. The main gable roof has its ridge parallel to the street. Covered with natural wood colored asbestous shingles, the roof is quite steep and finished with shallow cornice and retura that has a cyma recta and fillet crownmolding. There are new brick chimneys in each gable. Quite tall, they have stucco-banded caps similiar to 18th century chimneys here.

The house is covered with lapped siding finished against narrow corner boards. Window trim is flush with the wall surface as are the plain wooden sills. Above the windows is a drip molding which suggests an architrave. The treatment of siding and trim and the flat fascia beneath the roof cornice, creates the appearance of a tight, thin skin of siding.

Two over two sash is used in all windows but those on the first floor are the taller. There are also small pointed windows in the attic gables. Window shutters are louvered with operable panels. The main entry has a two-light transom, a door with round headed upper panels, and original cast brass hardware.

The front porch has square posts with scroll bracketts and a cornice like that used at the roof. There is another porch, recessed into the south wall rear on the second floor.

The building has recently been converted into two apartments and the interior

The house was constructed by J. Frank Wilson after 1888, the barn was built shortly before.
